2017 Nebraska Lobby Report

Lobbying must pay off, since the investment grows with each year! 2016 saw another million-dollar increase in lobby spending. That means 543 principals (special interests) paid 364 lobbyists $16,754,795 to influence our state government. If the lobbying money were to be distributed evenly each lobbyist would earn $46,029, while our forty-nine legislators are earning $12,000.

Of course that isn't the way lobbying money is distributed. It is a competitive battle for clients. It is actually survival-of-the-fittest and the big firms get the largest chunk. The major firms employ multiple lobbyists and represent more than forty principals each.

The level of expertise or salesmanship is difficult to measure. A single client list may include schools, banks, hospitals, liquor distributors, farmers, and technology companies. There is no doubt that the professional lobbyist is a multifaceted expert.

Where does this leave you, the average citizen, who wants to talk to his or her senator? It depends on your ability to compete. The lobbyist will be at the capitol every day. He can provide lunch, dinner, drinks, golf, or tickets to the game, and most importantly, campaign fundraisers. What can you do?

The lobbyist's tools are all about gaining access and winning favor with elected officials. Make no mistake, lobbyists are good at their trade and they are excellent communicators. The problem is they work for those who pay them and the client may not be working in the best interests of the public.

Our 2017 report looks at some of the details.

Lobby Expenses

Some lobbyists charge a flat rate for their services. Others charge a base fee and then expect reimbursement for entertainment and meals. The best place to look for total expenses is the guy who is paying the final bill, the principal.

The chart below shows itemized lobbying expenses from 2012 through 2016. You will quickly see the large increase in Lobbyist Compensation, and Entertainment. The increase in Total Expense is staggering particularly in light of the fact that it was a 60-day session (compared to the previous year's 90 day session).

Nebraska's Active Lobbyists

The chart below shows the number of registered lobbyists and principals tabulated by the Clerk of the Legislature's office from 2012 through 2016. The term Principal identifies all entities that pay for lobbyists. The number of compensated lobbyists reached an all time high in 2016.

Who Spends the Most on Lobbying?

Lobbyists don't come cheap! For many special interests it is much like hiring a top executive or maybe two. Below we have identified 10 of the top spenders over the last five years.

The Nebraska Chamber spent the most in 2016, but the League of Municipalities captured the five-year total for the first time.

Public Education Lobbying

Many public entities spend tax dollars to get more tax dollars.

Nebraska's Public School Funding Formula has remained a mystery to taxpayers and administrators alike. The only sure thing about the formula is the likelihood that it will be changed.

The lobby is one tool school districts can use to monitor the changes and protect their interests. Those school districts that have the funds to invest in lobbying exert greater influence, while those districts lacking in wealth find themselves on the outside looking in. The lobby does not work for all the children only those children in the districts that can pay

The following chart identifies the 17 school districts and the Learning Community that have those resources:

School District	2012	2013	2014	2015	2016	5-Year Total

*Statistics for 2016 recorded 2/19/17

- Over the last 5 years, Omaha Public Schools has spent the most, followed by Millard in second place and Lincoln in third.
- 2014 saw the most spent on school lobbying in a single year.
- $2,348,158 is the most spent collectively in a 5-year period.

The numbers are not staggering, but those districts that have their own lobbyist must believe they have an advantage or they wouldn't spend the money. What about the 269 school districts that can't afford a lobbyist? Are they at a serious disadvantage?

University Lobbying

The University of Nebraska is also competing for those education tax dollars. It had 6 in-house registered lobbyists battling for funds, as well as Radcliffe and Associates to back them up. In 2016 the University lobbying team spent $38,192.79 on entertaining state officials and $12,425.00 on providing tickets to events. The grand total came to $50,617.79.

It doesn't look good for those Class 3 school districts asking for more state aid. Season tickets to the high school football games won't do it.

Tracking the Money

How difficult is it to follow dollars spent on entertainment? It's almost as if the lobby wrote the rules. For example, lobbyists are restricted to gifts of $50 per month, per senator. Senators must report only gifts valued over $100. Gifts of food and beverages are excluded from reporting except as they show up only in the total entertainment figures for both the lobbyist and the principal.

In other words, it is nearly impossible to find out how much any lobbyist spent entertaining an individual senator. From the other perspective, senators have no idea how much is being spent on their colleagues.

The system seems to be working well for the legislature, but it remains a mystery for the public.

The University's Gifts

To its credit, the University of Nebraska is the only entity that discloses to whom tickets to athletic events are given. This is important because two season tickets for football are valued at $798 and state officials must report gifts over $100. Thus, football tickets are the single item that can be cross-checked.

To increase public confidence in the reporting system we do the cross-check each year.

The charts below were compiled from the 2016 University of Nebraska's Principal's Report and the senators' Statements of Financial Interest. The charts show who accepted free tickets, the value placed on those tickets, and if the value was reported to the Accountability and Disclosure Commission.

It is difficult to separate education tax dollars from University of Nebraska Foundation dollars when evaluating lobby expenses. It is clear, however, that the Foundation pays for tickets given to state elected officials.

And Now For Some Real Money

In Nebraska, lobbyists get to play a major role in campaign fundraising.

Political Action Committees PAC's

Political Action Committees are organizations established by corporations, labor unions, and other special interests to raise money from individuals for political campaigns or political causes. For many elected officials and candidates for public office, PAC's are one of the largest sources of campaign funds. A survey of campaign contributions over $250 shows how important PACs are to getting elected.

In Nebraska there are currently 117 active PACs with 41 lobbyists acting as treasurers. Do the lobbyists direct the campaign dollars to win favor? It is difficult to prove.

Client Campaign Contributions

It is not uncommon for lobbyists to send a letter to an elected official informing them of a forthcoming campaign contribution. These contributions may be in the thousands of dollars. The recipient normally recognizes the fact that the lobbyist is the conduit even though the client is the donor. Although the contribution is not from the lobbyist the connection is clear and the opportunities for influence may follow.

Altria Client Services (Phillip Morris) spent $831,900 on lobbying over a 5-year period. During an 11-month period, from 12/09/15 to 10/24/16, the company made direct campaign contributions amounting to $37,000. Most of the lobbying money goes to the lobbyist. The campaign dollars have a direct effect on the elected officials.

In-Session Fundraisers

An opportunity to make a real friend.

Lobbyist sponsored in-session fundraisers work well for both the lobbyist and the senators. The senators are in town, the lobbyists are in the rotunda, and the bills are on the floor. It is estimated that thousands of campaign dollars can be raised at breakfast just an hour before senators vote.

The invitation that goes out to senators offers a free meal. The opportunity for the lobbyists asks $100 at the door. Lobbyists may bring checks from their clients as well. These are closed events. The public and the press are not invited. Since much of the money comes in contributions under $250, it can be reported as cash making it nearly impossible to trace.

Twenty-nine states prohibit in-session fundraisers but Nebraska isn't one of them. Common Cause Nebraska has helped to draft legislation to prohibit these events but the Government Committee has refused to advance the bills.

One might think that term limits would reduce the demand. That is not always the case. Some term limited folks like a healthy war chest for future endeavors.

Lobbyist sponsored fundraiser take place throughout the year, but money-changing hands during the session lends itself to corruption.

The Revolving Door

The “revolving Door” continues to turn as Nebraska’s elected officials leave their offices to join the lobbying ranks. When we elect individuals we expect them to serve the interest of their constituents and the state. As a result, they gain special knowledge and relationships. This background is a public trust. It should not be bought and sold.

Special interests outside of government are more than willing to buy that knowledge and use those relationships for financial gain.

Common Cause believes there should be a 2 year “cooling off period” before public officials become paid lobbyists.
